

The two little Soldiers

The two little Soldiers have the story of betrayal. The writer, Guy-de Maupassant in a realistic way explains the affinity with the native place and the home town. There is the constant current of home sickness from the first to the last. The details of love and romance have the secrecy that causes the death of the friend. The two friends are Luc le Gainedic and Jean Kerdron from Plouyiron. On every Sunday they live leave the baracke, pass through Courbevoie and Bezons. Both have the blue eyes and the breton faces. They purchase "the eatable and wine" on the way and the move to the little forest of Champignol. On the way they stop in mid of the bridge to enjoy the currents and the music of Sirean. They have two bricks, little branches are collected to make the fire to heat the eatables on the tip of knives. Later they stretch and lie down on the grass to get lost in the little memories of the past in their native places. It's so.

happens that a dairy maid passes by and stops to look at them to have the first introduction. On return, she shares the milk with them by pouring that to the wine-bottle.

On return<sup>of</sup> the friends decided to have some gift for the maid on next Sunday. The Candy is purchased that lies in Jean's pocket. Luc is more daring and one meeting the maid, offers her the Candy. The girl sits down in the company for some time and talks about her village, the master and her job. On the third Sunday, the friendship is matured. On Tuesday, Luc is absent from the barracks till ten in the night. On coming Friday he borrows some money and disappears for the whole day. On the fourth Sunday, the two friends as usual come to the forest to ~~have~~<sup>have</sup> the best of time. Jean is ~~also~~ already mentally sick for the happening on two days is mostly silent. On arrival, the dairymaid freely kisses Luc and the two move to the forest to milk the cow. Later, they disappear for some time and come back tired. The maid has no milk for
